might be interesting. It has been announced that Congress has curtailed expenditures by some $300,000,000 under the annual budget recommendations. This is true. It is also, and very justly, true. It is also, and very justly, asserted that more than $6,000,000,000 of the public debt has been retired since the close of hostilities in Europe in 1918.

The charge has been made that this tremendous saving in expenditures has been achieved at the expense of the public service in many instances, as witness the condition of public buildings, especially the condition of army barracks. Opponents of the Administration also allege that expenditures have been on the increase ever since 1924. And that

New Motor Claims

500 Miles an Hour BY WIRELESS TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

THE rocket motor experiments by the Opel Company of Berlin are followed by a report that a man named Lowy, a Slovak mechanic, after five years' experimenting, has invented a still more powerful engine. Lowy arrived here last January. He has now completed at Tatra Automobile Works a motor claimed to have a speed of more than 500 miles an hour. It is primarily intended for use in air-planes. The military authorities are particularly interested in the tests.

Attorney-General Impeached by House Faced Senate Trial-No Action

Arthur K. Reading, Attorney-Gen eral of Massachusetts, has trans-mitted his resignation to the State Legislature and the Governor fol-lowing a vote of the House of Representatives, 196 to 18, to bring an impeachment against him before the Senate on charges of maladministra tion and misconduct in office.

The resignation contained but eight words, "I hereby resign the of-fice of Attorney General," and the ORIGINAL TREATY signature.

Recommendation as to whether the resignation shall be accepted rests with the Committee on Rules of the House and Senate, to which it was referred by the presiding officers.
Meanwhile, the investigating committee continued its work of drafting articles of impeachment, though George F. James, Representative and chairman, said he could not say the meeting here, and the Holladay serve as a further inducement to whether the proceedings would be dropped.

Normal expenditures of the Government have increased nearly $500,-000,000 since the Harding Administration. The control exercised over them has not been adequate to pre-vent the increase. But the normal expenditures have left the Treasury be invited. This surplus for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927, was $635,000,000.

For 1928 it was figured at $401,000,-000, whereas for the next fiscal year -1929-it is expected to be only $212,700,000. This figure, of course, would be greatly augmented if all the foreign governments owing the United States should begin to refund and make payments on their debts. Furthermore, the estimated sur-plus in future years might be much larger if it were not intended to press for the retirement of the public debt of the United States. Here is how the public debt stood at the end of each fiscal year since

Pennsylvania Male Chorus to Take Part in National Musical Festival

PECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO HOLYHEAD, Wales-Active preparations continue to be made for the holding of the 1928 Royal National Eisteddfod of Wales at Treorky, South Wales, next August. It is the custom to hold the popular Welsh festival alternately in the north and south, as it is believed that this promotes the keenest rivairy. Considerable interest has been aroused as a result of the recent announcement that the Pennsylvania Anthracite Male Chorus is to compete.

Speculation is now rife in Wales as to how many Welsh-Americans may be expected. It is authoritatively stated that at least 1000 will Indo-China and Siam Begin make the round trip on the White Star Liner, Baltic, scheduled to call from New York on July 21. Summer Frocks

Paris

T IS high time that we began to think of frocks for the summer months, for the seaside or mounains, or, if one is so fortunate as to live in a small community, for the various social events at the neigh-boring country club. At the recent ni-season collections of the great Parisian dressmakers, designed primarily to exhibit models for the early autumn, were included also for the benefit of the French clienele, a number of last-minute models for summer wear, models which, coming so late in the season, will not be seen in America. Among these costumes were some shown by Captain Molyneux that were made of the silk which is used for men's shirts, both in plain colors and in striped These consisted either of the familiar two-piece jumper suit or a one-piece frock, and a loose plain jacket of the same material. The skirts were laid in either side or narrow box-pleats and the bodices, whether of the jumper variety or attimes fastened down the side with a row of buttons and with neck cut square or on a diagonal line. Sometimes, too, they were bloused a bit with turned-back collar and ties of the same silk, and they were always orn with a narrow leather belt. A number of these frocks were

Outside of the new material and the loose jacket, which is a novelty for this type of costume, there is another very interesting feature of these models. This is the plain yoke at the top of the pleated skirt which is one of the outstanding novelties of the new season and which is seen in a majority of the collections not only on simple morning frocks but on the more elaborate afternoon and evening gowns as well. The in-spiration for 'his yoke was, undoubtedly, the popular silk kerchief which has been worn for several seasons not only about the neck but also as a girdle. If one tied one of these three-cornered handkerchiefs tightly about the hips of a pleated skirt and pulled the point well down good idea of the new yoke. There "breckies" yoke will be skirt with the tight or corn-colored georgette. The skirts are several varieties of this to be outstanding features of the winter Sometimes the point is at the middle

There is one which is especially attractive in a deep pink, strictly tailored, with a white leather belt and with collar pockets and cuffs edged with white rickrack braid. Frocks of checked gingham are shown for tennis, and one house includes in its demi-season collection several models in the cotton prints, which in the United States are called calico. It therefore looks revival of all the old-fashioned cotton materials of our childhood. Dainty Types Voile and marquisette in little checks or larger plaid designs in soft shaded colorings are used by several of the designers for afternoon frocks and these often are worn with a loose unlined jacket of the same malovely soft green plaid was in the demi-season collection of Elspeth Champcommunal. The skirt laid in narrow box pleats, the bodice slightly bloused and worn with a narrow green leather belt; long sleeves were gathered into a narrow wrist band, and a loose jacket had a narrow turnover collar tied with a bow of the same material. Figured georgettes and crepe-de-chines in bodices and skirts with rows of diagonal ruffles or plisse flounces are popular afternoon frocks, and plain georgettes in beige and the pastel shades of blue and green are also still in vogue, but the flowered chif-fons and mousselines-de-soie are, by all odds, the prime favorites, not only for the summer afternoon gown but for the evening frock as well. In summer the steamer brought friends down the canal to the cottage, in winter an ancient bus rumbled down the lane to leave them spat as the rain swept down the old-fashioned chimney onto the burning logs. This particular winter had been extremely cold. An east wind whipped over the snow like a fiail and the frozen canal lay gray under a gray sky. The memory of long summer days in the slumberous grasses, of laughter and birdsong, conset and sunrise, grew faint and

So it was arranged. Friends of the summer were bidden to keep festival once more, and through a bitter for singleness of purpose, honesty of December afternoon they carried endeavor, and as a timely warning fuel in the center calculated to pro-duce a fire that would warm all with zest. The Babe fought his way into Gloucester in the teeth of the wind, on a ramshackle old bicycle that slipped its chain at each half- ity, itself the result of false belief in mile, to collect chops and bananas. At seven o'clock, under a starpowdered sky, the happy party gath-ered round the fire. Within the rays infinite Mind; and his every word, of its starlike formation they sat on logs and pushed the first potatoes

Songs followed, odd foolish little songs of the moment, made beautiful by friendship and happy days. Watching the ruddy glow of the fire creep over the snow, the Babe whistled the Serenade from La Boheme, never too often heard. Friendship became suddenly and incredibly precious. Prices started upward soon after the Prices started upward soon after the ppening and then dipped sharply, in what Wall Street characterized as a 'secondary reaction,' some of the osses running from 3 to nearly 6 points. Strong buying support was juickly provided, and the market readed upward again in the early fternoon. Specialties changed hands a large blocks.

Call money again repewed at $1/2.00

Call money again renewed at 6½ per cent, but there was a plentiful supply of funds available at that figure, and a shading of the official rate was reported in the "outside market." Time money and commercial paper rates continued firm. The abundance of money available on call undoubtedly stimulated the afternoon recovery.

Weekly steel trade reviews reported a further slight recession in output, but the seasonal decline has been gradual and a record-breaking projection is looked for in the first sixmonths of the year.

A further softening of commodity prices carried pig iron quotations to the lowest levels since 1915. Steel thares nevertheless received good support, particularly those engaged in the manufacture of so-called special steels. Call money again renewed at 6½ per

The weekly statement of the Amercan Petroleum Institute confirmed private reports of a substantial increase in crude oil production last week. Freight car traffic figures showed some improvement, leading to the hope that the returns will shortly begin to show gains over the corresponding weeks of last year. Bullish demonstrations in the martet centered largely in issues in which special developments are reported to pecial developments are reported to be pending. Allied Chemical, American ed and Advance Rumely commo and preferred all touched new high records on gains of 3 to 5 points. brisk demand for Weston Electric instrument was in anticipation of increased earnings through the manufacture and sale of airplane instruments. Freeport Texas, Coty, Vanadium Steel, Patino Mines and Producers & Refiners also showed substantial gains. Radio sold down to 195½ and then rebounded to above 202. Selling pressure was still apparent against the airplane stocks and such recent pool favorites as International Nickel, International Combustion, Frank G. Shattuck and Monegomery Ward. The closing was irregular. Lowering of call money rate to 6 per cent failed to arouse any great degree of bullish enthusiasm. Selling pressure was again in evidence against some of the recent leaders, Radio dipping from an early high of 203½ to 196½. Allied Chemical and some of the other pool ipecialties showed consistent strength. Fotal sales approximated 3,100,000 thares.

Steel Corporation took an unexpected spurt of 1 per cent the last week, now averaging about 82½ per cent. Independent companies are still at about 76 per cent. Bethlehem Steel is said to be continuing its activities at 80 per cent.
The average for the entire industry is put at about 79½ per cent, compared with 79 per cent the week before. Loadings of revenue freight in the week ended May 26 totaled 1,020,916 cars, according to the American Railway Association. This was 17,419 over the preceding week, due to heavier movement of ore, but was 5873 below 1927, and 59,870 under 1926. Decreases compared with the week before were reported in coke and merchandise and less than carload lot freight.

Sales of the W. T. Grant Company stores in May were $4.096.002, which represented a gain of 29.6 per cent over the corresponding month of last year. Sales for the first five months of the year have totaled $16.925.112, an increase of $3.159.261, or 22.94 per cent as compared with the first five months of 1927.

United River Plate Telephone Company declared dividend of 8 per cent for 1927 the same as in the preceding year. The company proposes to increase capital to £8,000,000 by issue of 200,000 shares of £5 each.

Very naturally the Diesel engine has fitted into this picture and more there than anywhere else, have automotive engineers realized that its use in

> It would be hard to imagine an engine weighing 1100 pounds in an automobile. It would also be hard to imagine one man trying to drive such a piece of mechanism at 50 miles an hour. And it would be ludicrous to even think of 23,000,000 motor vehicles, equipped with such a power plant, trying to operate in traffic. This is why, previous to 1919, automotive engineers did not take the Diesel seriously.

> The first Diesel engine developed by Dr. Sperry in America, weighed just 22 pounds per horsepower. Its efficiency was unquestionable but the weight for automotive use was out of the question. Within the last year he has brought out a Diesel weighing about 3 pounds per horsepower and has in preparation an engine of this type weighing 11/2 pounds per horsepower. These last sizes and weights are considered practical and worthy of attention by automotive engineers.

The cylinders of the Diesel engine are completely scavenged after each operation, being forced to the highpressed air. Low grade fuel being used, metals must be employed which will stand up under the intense strain. That is the problem which is occupying the attention of automotive engineers all over the world. With prices of automobiles coming down each year and airplanes coming into more general use than ever before, it is a natural consequence that any power plant which satisfies the requirements of economical, efficient operation will be adopted by automotive engineers for quantity been made in the Diesel engine field for universal employment within the past few years than was made in all the previous time since Rudolf Diesel invented his engine in 1897.

Wilkins' Record

Capt. George Hubert Wilkins, who recently flew "across the top of the world," was reared on a sheep "sta-tion" in Australia, graduated from the Adelaide School of Mines as an electrical engineer, became an avia-tion camera expert and made Balkan war pictures, joined Stefansson's Ca nadian Arctic Expedition, headed the Australian photographic section on the western front during the war. In 1921 he joined in the British Imperial Antarctic Expedition, in 1922 was with Sir Ernest Shackleton on the "Quest" expedition, and then took command of an expedition organized by the British Museum of Natural History for the study of bird and animal life in remote parts of Australia.

A Word a Day

Recompense

Literally, to recompense, is to give back weight for weight, or to weigh together again. The very pleasing idea of appreciation is embodied in our general conception of this word. It is derived from the Latin re. again, and compensare, to weigh several things with one another, or to balance with one another. With what satisfaction one responds to a person who is in perfect balance! It is reward enough for time used or services rendered to experience the gratification of a well-balanced, har-monious mind which is sensitively appreciative.

To expect "compensation" is to nautics. ask for payment for loss of ability to gain; to demand "satisfaction" is to ask for sufficient payment for a wrong, whether apologies, or money, or both; a "reward" is a gift for a service. A "recompense," however, is not merely an equivalent return for something done or given, but one feels also the expression of appreciative payment.

"One is well recompensed who receives a smile from Her Grace."

The President and Nullification

UR amiable Boston contemporary, the Independent, remarks concerning the Tammany Governor who aspires to the Presidency: "As President he would have to be as dry as William G. McAdoo, unless the country suddenly decided it didn't want prohibition after all and went through the tedious process of repealing the Eighteenth Amendment. . . . And surely there will be no opportunity for the President, whoever he may happen to be, to accomplish the 'nullification' of which Baptists mumble.'

Let us consider that proposition. The Inde-pendent concedes that the Tammany Governor is personally wet. In a message to some New Jersey sympathizers some years ago he proclaimed his approval of any steps that would enable the boys "to put their feet on the brass rail and blow off the froth." His official record as assemblyman presents a long list of votes against proposed restrictions upon liquor selling in New York, while as Governor he supported and signed the bill which relieved police from any obligation to enforce the prohibition law. He makes no concealment of his hostility to prohibition, and his more intelligent supporters insist that his nomination should be attended by the adoption of a frankly wet program.

Now, the President is the Chief Executive of the Nation. He appoints the Secretary of the Treasury, who appoints the Director of Prohibition Enforcement, who in turn appoints every last inspector, tide-waiter, sleuth or patrolman in the prohibition service. Already these lesser officials are exposed to innumerable temptations to connive at the violation of the law. How sadly will their power of resistance be weakened if they know that the President himself is hostile to the law he has sworn to enforce! What will be the feeling of a federal officer set to enforce a law which Governor Smith thought Tammany policemen should be relieved from enforcing!

It would be impossible to overestimate the influence which an admittedly wet President would infallibly, even if unwittingly, exert for the demoralization of the prohibition enforcement agencies. That influence, furthermore, would be especially potent in sustaining and strengthening the efforts for the nullification of the law by persistent violation, and the citation of that nullification as an argument for its repeal.

For a year or more after the enactment of the law it was accepted by practically all the people as an accomplished fact. Gradually, mercenary and lawless forces discovered that great profit was to be found in its violation. The bootleggers and the liquor syndicate began their systematic endeavor to break down the prohibition law, precisely as in the days before prohibition saloon-keepers steadily labored to break down all restrictions upon their traffic-and in their endeavors, so far as New York was concerned, were invariably aided by that Tammany organization which now seeks to put one of its sachems in the White House. The nullifiers of the law have consistently insisted that its general violation afforded the chief reason for its repeal. Obviously, this argument would be greatly strengthened should the most prominent of all nullifiers be elected to the Presidency.

There are other and more specific things which the next President might do to accomplish the overthrow of the law. Three justices of the Supreme Court are well past the age of seventy and their retirement may reasonably be looked for at any time. The appointment of judges in sympathy with Tammany would make possible the judicial approval of any nullification measures which Congress, in response to the urgency of a "wet" President, might enact. The Treasury Department charged with its enforcement, the State Department which deals with the delicate international problems growing out of prohibition, and the Department of Justice charged with prosecutions, might all be filled with complaisant wets-and probably would be. But of chief importance is the fact that the election of Governor Smith would inevitably take the force and sincerity out of efforts for prohibition enforcement and encourage the endeavor to accomplish its repeal by persistent violation. With this indubitable truth in mind, no one can say without qualification that the next President can do nothing to nullify the law.

Canada's Immigration Inquiry

ANY people in Canada have been far from MANY people in Canada have been far from satisfied in recent years with the racial complexion of the streams of immigration, particularly into the prairie West. In response to criticism offered a few months ago in the Dominion Parliament, the House of Commons Committee on Agriculture and Immigration undertook an inquiry into the general question. Much helpful evidence has been placed on record. The views of some Canadian leaders in commerce and industry, of men in the public eye, of clergymen, immigration officials and other citizens have been heard. It is hoped that the parliamentary committee's report will lead to some necessary changes in the legislation governing Canadian immigration, as well as to an improvement, perhaps, in the administration of the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Canada's desire is to attract settlers mainly from the English-speaking countries, particularly Great Britain and the United States, but immigrants from the Scandinavian countries are also regarded as most adaptable to Canadian conditions. The tendency is for immigrants from less closely related countries to outnumber the British migration to Canada.

It has been disclosed before the parliamentary committee that existing legislation for the purpose of restricting the inflow of immigrants from certain parts of Europe has been circumvented to some extent by the issuing of special permits from the department under a form of political patronage. Both political parties and the smaller groups in Parliament have involved themselves, however, in the use of the permit system for the benefit of constituents.

It is possible that Canada may eventually find it desirable to adopt the quota method of regulating immigration. Up to the present, there has been no very strong demand for it, but there is considerable disquiet concerning the apparent submergence of some English-speaking communities before the steady colonization of the prairie provinces by settlers from countries where social conditions differ materially from the Canadian standard.

Federal Coal Action Needed

TEN big mines of the Rockefeller-owned Consolidation Coal Company in Pennsylvania and West Virginia are going to be closed down indefinitely in order that the other mines of the company may operate full time. The company faced the alternative of part-time employment for all of its mines, or of full-time employment for part of them and total closing for the rest. It chose the latter course, and some newspapers have applauded this seemingly reasonable decision as a "pioneer step" looking to something better in the badly organized but basic bituminous industry.

For decades, going on to about half a century, countless other companies have taken an opposite decision and have kept all their properties working at part time rather than shut down the surplus mines. The result has been demoralizing to the men, with conditions somewhat worse today, on the whole, than they were thirty or forty years ago. About half a million "surplus" men are supposed to be in the industry now. When the operators gather around the conference table they declare they cannot increase wages because mines are already barely profitable, while miners retort that wages on the part-time basis are already pitifully small. This has been the deadlock over which two perfectly honest parties-each unable to see the other's viewpoint-have struggled for years; and the basic trouble has come down always to the same thing: too many mines, too many miners.

Unfortunately, there is nothing in the past history of the coal situation to further the belief that the Consolidation Company's action will be followed by other companies. In fact, when the matter is considered more fully, it is even doubtful if the Consolidation Company acted from the exalted motives which some of its spokesmen have indicated. A grocery chain, for instance, that closed down ten unprofitable stores, would be considered to be taking a sensible course. The coal company has closed certain mines in a field where competition is so intense and fits so small that it is even doubtful whether aggregate incomes have met expenditures in recent years. The surplus tide of soft coal will simply sweep over the gap left by the withdrawal of ten mines as the ocean sweeps over a child's castle in the sand.

Why, then, do not the other excess mines shut down? Because of a close-knit cycle of cause and effect which makes such a neat trap for the unwary that the academic type of economist must needs rub his hands over its perfection. Coal is immensely plentiful over the United States. In seasonal demands, prices rise and there may be temporary profits. Coal mines are opened, and these cannot be closed again without almost total loss, for a mine is merely a hole in the ground, and its roof will fall in unless it is constantly patrolled and guarded. Consequently, if a mine is abandoned it means loss of capital investment, whereas if it is operated from week to week, even though it does not meet expenses, yet the loss is temporarily reduced, and there is always the chance of a profit in the event of labor disturbances somewhere else, or of a big seasonal demand.

And so the story goes. The surplus coal keeps on. No single industry or group of companies can solve the primary disorder of American industrial life by itself. What is needed is a federal policy, and national action on a scale broad enough to include the industry.

Stabilization in Europe

THERE is little doubt that Europe generally is entering on the final stages of monetary stabilization. Austria and Hungary were helped by the League of Nations to financial restoration. England, whose position has always been solid, soon returned to the so-called gold standard. Germany recovered only after the catastrophic fall of the mark, but is now in an excellent situation. Italy has fixed its currency, as has Belgium. France, according to economists and politicians, is on the eve of legal stabilization. Yet there still remain countries in Europe which have need of important financial operations.

It is satisfactory to learn then that Rumania is planning to stabilize the lei within the next few months, and that the United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy will probably participate in the stabilization loan. Greece has just emerged from the stabilization of the drachma. Jugoslavia is making an appeal to the banks of the leading nations for assistance in the task of stabilization. That task would be facilitated, in all cases, were there an internal European arrangement about debts. Rumania has put its debts toward France on an acceptable footing. Greece has failed to do so. Jugoslavia is beginning negotiations on the subject. Bulgaria, which has had to contend with exceptional difficulties, may turn toward the League of Nations, as did Greece, and there is every indication that the great powers will not be unfriendly, but will permit Bulgaria to postpone its reparation payments, and forward, in various ways, the Bulgarian desire for stabilization. Altogether it would appear that in a calmer atmosphere European countries are moving steadily, swiftly, and certainly in the direction of all-round stabilization. The financial improvement is accompanied by an economic improvement, while the political outlook is certainly better.

Why "Commencement"?

THOUSANDS of students throughout the world stand today within reach of a goal which they have striven for several years to attain. At the end of the college course it looms up, with an impressive aspect of finality. And yet, though it has long seemed to mark the end of a vista, and many have hardly sought to look beyond it, this goal is termed "commence-Why, more than one undergraduate asks himself, should such a name be given to a day or a ceremony which appears to stand at the end of an epoch? Why give a name which signifies a beginning to an event which marks the consummation of a long course of study?

The trouble, of course, lies not in the word, which is a fine old one, but in the point of view. The completion of a college course is not an "end-all." but really a "commencement." It is a commencement of a new and higher experience, an elevation to a plane above that upon which one has been living. The word was originally employed in this sense to signify the granting of an academic degree, upon receipt of which the scholar entered upon a career as a man of learning. Many an old book speaks of a student as having "commenced Bachelor of Arts." or Master, or Doctor, as the case might be, on a certain date. The emphasis lay not on the accomplishment of past years, but upon the newly opening vista of usefulness in a more advanced field of activity. In a sense, one's life as a scholar only commenced with the taking of a degree.

This refreshing and eminently sensible meaning of an expressive term should not be permitted to become overshadowed by unseemly connotations. Happily, the tendency of university seniors to look back upon their years at college with a sentimental, to put it mildly, attachment, is on the wane. The college graduate of today can review with gratification a period of growth and accomplishment without weeping salt tears over "bright college years" which are never to return. His love for his Alma Mater is not less because he leaves the campus without moping, and presses eagerly forward to the "commencement" of new activ-

Bribes and Scornful Eyes

VERY now and then somebody somewhere enunciates the fantastic belief that book reviewers are in the habit of taking bribes from those who bring out books. But none has ever before done it so completely as the librarian in Massachusetts who ventured publicly that "the reviews in leading newspapers, magazines and other sources of book information are subsidized by book publishers." Bribery offers an insidious temptation, and Dr. Johnson long ago wrote a robust warning for those exposed to it. But, in the opinion of this librarian, there seems to be no book reviewer in the United States who bravely follows that good advice to Turn from the glittering bribe thy scornful eye, Nor sell for gold what gold could never buy.

In less ornate phrase, they are "all tarred with the same stick.

This fantastic utterance—fantastic because so completely outside and ignorant of the realities of the reviewing occupation—has probably done the reviews some little service. It stirred indignant rejoinders, not by the reviewers themselves but by impartial witnesses who happened to know something about the way in which books are reviewed. The general public, or at least that part of it which reads the rejoinders. knows more than before about how the reviewers do their work, and will read them with proportionately better understanding.

The notion of a large body of subsidized book reviewers vanishes when one realizes that the publisher (even if he so desired) lacks opportunity to expose his glittering bribe to the reviewer's eye. Such personal contact is missing as makes possible and continues the distribution of tips. But for the average reader of book reviews in "leading newspapers, magazines and other sources of book information," grateful for this assistance in his otherwise impossible effort to keep up with contemporary literature, there is no need of defending the honesty of the reviewers. Such a reader knows by experience that if there were a real unanimity of dishonesty there would be more apparent unanimity of opinion. If there are any glittering bribes in this business, there are evidently also a large number of scornful eyes.

Editorial Notes

With hundreds standing in line and the capacity of the grounds sold out, soccer football is proving to be one of the big attractions of the Olympic Games at Amsterdam. The Stadium holds 48,000, but three times that number of persons wanted to see the games. This interest is largely due to the fact that Uruguay won the title four years ago and, judging from the 11to-2 victory scored by Argentina over the United States, the title bids fair to remain in South America another four years.

An American motor manufacturer says that he and few business men actually realize what $1,000,000 really is. Well, for one thing, a little packet of 100 new United States $10,000 bills that can with ease be carried in one's coat pocket, is $1,000,000.

Well, the farmers who plan to go to the Republican convention at Kansas City in automobiles to plead for farm relief do not appear to be as hard pressed as Coxey's Army was when it walked to Washington for congressional relief.

An Air Mail Inauguration

T WAS a warm spring eyening-a perfect night. A light breeze swept the sky clear, and moon and stars cast their silvery light across the earth. At a spot, an open field of liberal size situated but a few miles outside the city, a small group collected. The balmy southern atmosphere was filled with a tenseness which might have appeared strange to the passer-by, but a glance at the surroundings would have been sufficient to indicate, at least in a general way, the nature of the consuming interest which held those who stood about.

It was an airport, nor would it have needed an expert to discover this fact. There was the hangar and there were the airplanes. But why the constantly increasing crowd? Automobiles were pouring in, row after row, and a full squad of police was engaged in maintaining good order. Had there been a stranger present it would not have been long before his enlightenment came, for very shortly, in a cloud of dust, a small truck came dashing up the road, labeled "air mail."

This was the city's airport. For the first time in history, the South was to be brought within but a few hours of the business centers of the North. In other words, a great trunk air line was shortly to be inaugurated, and its significance was brimming in the thoughts of each and every spectator.

Turning from the crowds, we made our way inside the barriers to the little flight office. Three men bent over a desk examining papers and noting down weather reports as they came in over the long-distance line. The weather over the entire route stretching both north and south was perfect. What a wonderful night for an opening!

"What time will she leave?" someone asked, and the field manager, a little tense with the weight of the occasion, replied, "She's due out at 8 p. m. and should reach here by 9:50, but she may be a bit late owing to the ceremonies." It was nearly 9:50 then, so we moved out into the open again to watch and listen. What a marvelous occasion! Here we were about to witness the inauguration of a trunk air line destined to become one of the most important links in the vast airway system which is spreading over the United States-the most rapid system of transportation the world has ever known. How tame the narrative of the opening of a railroad system in bygone days, compared with the spectacle we were about to witness; and how vast its significance! No rails to peer down while watching for the expected arrival; no signals to indicate the tracks were clear; just a still night at an airport, a wide open expanse under a starlit sky, pierced at regular intervals as the 10,000,000 candle power beacon light atop its thirty-foot tower, sent its revolving beam out into the night. Expectation runs riot-it knows no bounds. "From which direction will she come?" All eyes are turned in search through the distant darkness across the horizon. + + +

There is a hum; it grows louder. It must be the plane, out where is it? Someone sights it, a red and a green speck of light in the sky, while others become agitated because they cannot spot it. Soon the red and green lights grow larger—the navigation lights of this courier of the night.

As the mail plane draws near excitement gives vent to cheers. The first air mail is about to arrive from the South. The airplane, barely discernible in the night, circles over the field which has suddenly become bathed in brilliant light as a mechanic in the hangar throws in the switch for the floodlights. Almost at the same instant the pilot of the plane, having noted the direction of the wind as indicated by the lighted "cone" on the hangar roof, prepares to make a landing. He switches on the powerful headlights fitted to the lower wings of the plane and two shafts of light pierce the night as the machine comes around again in a graceful curve and alights gently in the middle of the field.

The air mail has arrived. The plane "taxies" up to the hangar and is instantly surrounded by spectators. We congratulate the pilot-he is even compelled to climb out of his cockpit, reluctantly, to receive the cheers of the crowd and a souvenir presented by the city fathers. But this is but a phase of the inauguration and is as nothing compared with the actual job of carrying Uncle Sam's mail by air. Accordingly, we turn from the scene of cerethe spectators, and leaving that to thought to the more serious task of checking the mail.

The plane will stop at the airport but a few moments. and much has to be done. The mail pouches destined for our city must be unloaded and checked and the outgoing bags of mail stacked into the already crowded mail com-

Alas-it is no use-the plane is already loaded to capacity; only one bag of northbound mail can be accom-modated, so great has been the mail load taken on at the southern terminus. But a relief plane is due shortly and the remainder must await its arrival.

How numerous appear to be the operations necessary before the ship can be dispatched on its way. The pilot is back in the cockpit and impatient to go. Everything is so new-so strange. Are we forgetting anything? Have we checked the mail load taken on-and what about the pilot's signature? And so on.

Meanwhile the mechanic is refueling the ship and making out his gas and oil report. A genuine business, this! No play about it! We are carrying the Nation's mail now, we are responsible for it, our records must be exact, our responsibility is great.

+ + + But we have little time to muse. All is in readiness for the departure. The crowd is pushed back. "Contact!" shouts the mechanic. "Contact!" replies the pilot. The glistening metal propeller swings over and the radial engine bursts into a rattle of activity, while the pilot opens the throttle and the plane swings smartly about.

A roar, a spurt of flame and the trim little mail plane darts across the ground, headlights casting their powerful beams over the airport. Into the air she climbs in a steep sweeping curve. The headlights go out and all that is left of our visitor of the night are the little red and green

It is night again. In the excitement we had almost forgotten this. The air is still, the beacon light alone swinging its beam round and round across the sky, and with a cheer and a rustle the crowd begins to disperse. They have seen what they came to see, the inauguration of the air mail, and it is now bedtime for most of them.

But how different were our own thoughts! We found ourselves standing by the hangar door, wondering. The field manager had left us and was in his little office making up his report. To us it was something we had expected and looked forward to for years. The airplane was again being given an opportunity to prove its worth, not as a weapon of war, but as the herald of closer contact and understanding throughout the world. How the spectacle we had just witnessed would live with us down the ages! Today, just a mail plane arriving by night and continuing on its way; but tomorrow, the memorable occasion marking the beginning of a service which will, by then, have developed into the very mainstay of business relationship between all corners of the vast expanse of the United States, comparable in importance to its great railroad system and supplementary in its nature. And we, ourselves, will have been part of this inauguration!

+ + + But then was not the time to dream. Hastily we got onto the job again, astounded almost to discover we still carried about a bag of mail which we hastily deposited safely in the care of the postal authority, the first bag of mail ever to arrive by air in that city!

Proceeding to the flight office our immediate duty was to telephone our report. "Hello, Station E calling. Plane No. 22 left at 11:03 p. m., G—B—piloting. How's news on the northern division?" And the distant reply: "Operations office reports all's well. Relief plane flying north left here O. K. with capacity load, Spiloting. What news have you from the South?" Our news from the southern terminus was good and we replaced the receiver with a pulsating thrill resulting from having just received our first mental picture of the lively and organized activity along the whole line.

And so the inauguration proceeded. In fact, it was no longer an inauguration, but a smoothly operating night air transport system. The relief plane arrived and proceeded with the overflow of mail bound north, and activity settled down to the long wait for the arrival of the first south bound plane due in at 4:32 a. m. Truly an all-night job is this business of carrying the United States mail! But all this is now over. We returned north to our headquarters. The air mail service has been inaugurated and is now operating every night nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers in the swift completion of their appointed rounds" (Herodotus).

From the World's Great Capitals—Berlin

BERLIN ERMANY'S first Pullman-car train, the Rheingold Express, is now in operation, proving a welcome addition to the Reichsbahn service. Starting from Hoek van Holland it takes its way to Lucerne via Cologne and Basel. Everything has been done to make this new train de luxe worthy of its name. It is composed of seven coaches-first and second class-a surcharge of three marks for the former and two for the latter being imposed. The coloring is white and mauve, the seats are exceedingly comfortable and the windows are unusually large, affording an uninterrupted view of the beautiful country. There is no dining car, all meals being served in the separate cars, at tables for two persons in the first class and for four in the second class. For each two cars a wellappointed kitchen is provided so that quick and efficient service is assured. An interesting feature of the new express is that the equipment of one of the cars is entirely of steel. From Holland to Cologne the Rheingold express runs along the right banks of the Rhine and to Mayence through Coblenz along the left, thence it takes its way on the German side of the river through the Black Forest to Basel. The speed of this train has been considerably accelerated, so that it is possible to do the distance from London to Lucerne in twenty-four hours. 4 4 4

If the proposed plans of the Reichs railway are carried out, there will be several important changes in addition to the distasteful one of an average ten per cent tariff increase. For instance, the fourth class, which is much used by the working people, is to be entirely eliminated. The coaches of this class are not divided up like the other classes into compartments, but present a big bare space with a few wooden benches at the walls. Peasant women with their huge baskets of produce for the markets, which they carry on their backs, and passengers with limited purses and heavy boxes generally fill these coaches, and when all benches are occupied sit contentedly on their luggage. An atmosphere of good fellowship prevails in the fourth-class coaches which, though not very comfortable, are roomy and airy when not overcrowded. This class will not be given up without protest. In future there are to be only two classes, "the wooden class" and the "upholstered class," which will correspond approximately with the English first and third-class trains.

+ + + Berlin's women police are celebrating their first anniversary and can look back upon a very successful year. They are not uniformed as they are in Dresden, it having been thought wiser for the present not to make them unduly conspicuous. In the whole of Prussia there are now sixty-two policewomen, and the number is being added to. They are known as officers of the Crimina Department of Police, and pursue their work quietly and unobtrusively, dealing chiefly with youthful delinquents They seek to gain the children's confidence when investigations are made or evidence is requisite, and being all women of education and pleasant manner, they are successful where the policeman would probably fail. The women are in close touch and on the best of terms with their masculine colleagues, and are furnished with a sharp whistle-their own weapon-should the latters' assistance be required. The course of training for this calling is a strenuous one, lasting nine months, and strict examinations are the rule. The criminal department has received many letters during the past year from parents expressing gratitude for the help rendered their unruly

+ + + " The Society for the Aid of Educated Women-a practical organization that has rendered signal service to many is turning its attention to a regulation contained in the Reichs Book of Laws which has been either forgotten or willfully ignored. This regulation states that seats are to be provided for all women employed in shops and other business houses, so that an opportunity shall be afforded them, when not actively employed, to rest. In an appeal to the Ministry of Works the society shows that not only is this regulation complied with in but very few Berlin stores, but actually, on the contrary, employees are, in many large shops, strictly forbidden to sit during their working hours. The society considers it its duty to draw the attention of the authorities in question to this state of things, and demand amendment.

+ + + Unemployment in Carreny is steadily on the decrease, due in great measure to renewed activity in the building and kindred trades and to the demand for workers on the land. In the middle and end of April 13.7 per cent less of unemployment doles were paid out than was the case in the preceding half month, and altogether there are now 200,000 fewer unemployed workers in Germany than there were this time last year. The most gratifying progress in this regard is shown in agricultural districts of Silesia and Pomerania, while the least satisfactory conditions are stated to be those in Westphalia, where the textile industry is experiencing difficulties.

"Maine Tries an Experiment"

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Your editorial entitled "Maine Tries an Experiment" (published April 5) was to me a wonderfully clear ex-position of a difficult subject. The majority of papers would simply interpret the fact of Smith delegates as a wet victory, and some did not state that the Maine delegates stood for a dry program.

Another way of clearing the public consciousness of the belief that Smith delegates necessarily signify wetness would be by pointing out that the Democratic Party in all the pre-prohibition dry states is not committed to the wet cause at all. In Iowa, for instance, the Democrats would have no show if the wet cause were espoused, and yet because Meredith was not elected a delegate, some papers herald this fact as a wet victory. Washington and Idaho are two other states where the Democrats have been dry up to the present and do not mean to turn wet by supporting Smith. Chicago, Ill.
